This problem caused much discussion at the village board meeting Tuesday night. It was finally decided that a list of dog owners who have paid numbering 13 will be turned over to Martin Muehler and he has been instructed to call on all other dog owners not listed on the paid list to collect the $1 annual dog tax. All dog owners who either refuse to pay this tax or who promise to do so but forget about it, have until the 15th of March to pay up. All those delinquent will be turned in to Joseph Kohl, assessor of Frankfort township who will assess the dog tax against the personal property of the delinquent dog owners. The Oilers took two games from the Smokers to gain a game on the Paperhangers. Robinson's Tavern took two games from the Bankers and are four games out of the lead. The records show that general operating expenses of the office during the first three years of my administration were reduced by more than $10,000.00. While at the same time for the like period of years, the Recorder's office returned to Will County more than $20,000.00 in excess earnings. This sum represents more than was returned by this office in the more than thirteen full years preceding my administration.

Since 1940 we have made technical alterations in recording processes, in conformity with State Statutes, which tend toward progress and efficiency in the office.

It has been my aim to give to this important office, a business-like administration. I believe that figures and records of the office will substantiate a successful business-like administration has been rendered.

This, in brief, is my record. And I shall stand for reelection on that record."

TO PRESENT MOVIE ON ALASKAN HIGHWAY TONITE

Trinity Lutheran PTA of Tinley Park, is sponsoring a special showing of the sound motion picture, "The Alaska Highway" at Trinity Lutheran school, March 10 at 8 pm. "The Alaska Highway" tells the interesting story of the building of an overland supply road to Alaska, a road built against such odds and in such record time that it will go down in history as one of the great engineering projects of all time.

The picture shows the U. S. Army Engineers surveying the route, slashing out a pioneer road through trackless forests, across treacherous swamps, icy rivers and snow-capped mountains and then the courageous crews of workmen sent in by private contractors to finish the job.

Carved and blasted through more than 1600 miles of the toughest raw wilderness on the American continent in only six months, this undertaking was a challenge to Americans, greater than that of the Panama Canal. Mighty industrial weapons are seen in the picture as great bulldozers march thru forests, crushing huge trees to the ground, and giant shovels, tractors and carryalls speed the job. When started, the Japs were in possession of Aleutian bases, half-way between Tokyo and the American continent. The Army needed this highway and fast! Today, it is speeding supplies to far-flung outposts, linking Dawson Creek, Canada, to Fairbanks, Alaska.

The picture reveals the stunning and rugged beauty of this wilderness which will one day beckon countless of thousands of Americans to new homes or a wonderful vacationland.

For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus has made me free from the law of sin and death.

For what the law could not do, to guide the things of the flesh God sent His only Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh.

Jugoslavia's 'Tito'

By Frank Gervasi

(WNU Feature—Through special arrangement with Collier's Weekly)

Fifteen years ago, Josip Broz was a nameless man hunted as a Communist criminal by the police and secret agents of the then most powerful figure in Yugoslavia, Gen. Pera Zivkovic, strong-arm front man for the late pious, dictatorial King Alexander.

Josip Broz did not have a birth certificate, much less a passport. For the entire year 1928, he lived in the political underworld of cellars and garrets in Belgrade, Zagreb and Split, and wherever he could find refuge.

His crime? He had organized the Metal Workers' Union and was one of the leaders of the trade-union movement in Yugoslavia.

He was caught early in 1929 and jailed. He was released four years later with gray in the soft waves of his brown hair, ulcers in his stomach and a dream in his brain.

Today Josip Broz is the military and spiritual leader of a movement which has broken the Nazis' hold on the Balkans, obviated an Allied offensive in southeastern Europe until the main German armies can be crushed in the East and West, and has given new meaning to the words "A People's War" and "The Four Freedoms."

To his army and the guerrilla bands and to millions of Yugoslavs in freed territory and the outside world, Josip Broz is known as Tito. "Ti" means you and "To" means this. Broz has few idiosyncrasies or mannerisms to mark him apart from other men, but one of them is the habit of prefacing an order with "You do this." Hence his name. It is pronounced Tee-toe.

To the Titos of this world and their followers, must go an indefinite measure of credit for the victory that will be ours.

To one particular Tito—he who was born on a 30-acre farm near Zagreb of a Croat father and a Slovene mother—must go most of the credit for the rebirth of Yugoslavia and the immobilization of the German armies in the Balkans, and the setting into motion of a revolution in southeastern Europe which might provide a permanent solution to the problems of one-third of the people of that continent.

Mikhailovich Helped. What credit isn't Tito's must be given to Draja Mikhailovich, who unfortunately chose, at one stage of his dramatic career as liberator, to turn from killing Germans to taking part in civil war and only sporadically resumed the bigger job.

Tito is of slightly more than medium height, broad-shouldered, long-armed and sturdy-legged. His head sets low on his shoulders and it is a remarkable head. In profile, it is the head of a poet and philosopher who is also a skilled craftsman—a Cellini perhaps. Full face, it is the tough, determined visage of a triple-threat halfback.

A side view of this prodigious proletarian shows a high forehead, bulgy shaggy brows with a deep crease between them, capable of eloquent frowning. Tito's nose is long, slightly beaked, with thick nostrils. He has a straight, kindly mouth, good chin and a heavy workman's neck. There is what some would call an American Indian cast in his features.

Face to face, he looks remarkably like a clean-shaven Stalin, the effect being accentuated consciously or not by the cut of his unadorned broad-collared tunic.

He speaks matter-of-factly, in a low, well-modulated voice, looks directly at you as he talks and never speaks until you have finished what you have to say. He talks, they say, to each individual in an audience, moving his eyes deliberately from one person to another.

He smokes innumerable cigarettes, chain fashion, from a small holder. Far from being "a man of steel," he is capable of great emotion.

Mourns for Dead.

"When something really bloody happens," a man who spent months with him in Yugoslavia told me, "he's knocked out. No hysterics, no pyrotechnics. He just retires quietly for hours, as he did the night he got word that his friends Milosevic and Kovasevic had been killed."

Out of their affection for Tito, the people have fashioned a legendary man of extraordinary courage and endurance who rides a white charger and walks uphill to spare his strength, who is always at the head of his guerrilla detachments.

SHOE FIGHT

A hot fight is raging backstage between the WPB and the OPA over shoe leather. Inside fact is that the shoes you are wearing are inferior not entirely because the best leather is rightfully being allocated to the armed forces. That is only part of the story.

Another reason why your shoes are inferior and your shoe bill higher is that certain industry moguls in WPB's leather and shoe branch have been blocking a program to prolong the wear of civilian shoes by the application of wax and oil treatments to soles. The process costs only two or three cents a shoe, but many manufacturers don't like it because it isn't flossy enough. They say that consumers prefer shoes with a high, light polish on the sole, though they admit that this polish robs the sole of some of its wearing quality.

Bureau of Standards experts have testified at hearings of the senate war-mobilization committee, headed by West Virginia's Sen. Harley Kilgore, that the use of oil (by actual test) prolongs the life of shoes 14 per cent, while soles treated with wax preparations last from 30 to 41 per cent longer.

This has been corroborated by leading industry spokesmen, including Paul C. Wolfer, a vice president of the Douglas Shoe company, who is a consultant in the standards division of the OPA. Wolfer not only urged general adoption of oil-wax treatments but intimated that the government should crack down on the shoe industry and require it.

In addition to cutting down the nation's shoe bill, another factor Wolfer emphasized was wartime conservation of leather. So far, however, the OPA has made little progress in selling the oil-treatment idea to the WPB. Some manufacturers have adopted the sole treatments voluntarily, but only on a very limited scale.

The big shoe companies, OPA claims, are antagonistic. In this, they have the potent backing of the WPB's leather and shoe branch, headed by Lawrence B. Sheppard, a vice president of the Hanover Shoe company.

Before the Kilgore committee, Sheppard expounded at length on "manufacturing difficulties . . . lack of conclusive tests," and other objections to a government order requiring the oil treatment of soles. His statement was effectively contradicted by other witnesses, who brought out that tests had been adequate and that facilities for sole treatments could be installed throughout the country with little difficulty and at small cost.

NOTE: The Kilgore committee has finally sent a hot note to Donald Nelson demanding that he issue an order to compel the general adoption of sole treatments by shoe companies.

DESK ADMIRALS

The navy is doing a magnificent job whenever it goes into action in the Pacific, but members of the Truman committee are not convinced that this is true of all the desk admirals or their flunkies in Washington. Among other things, they are casting a curious eye at the manner in which Adm. Ernie King and his staff preserve the myth of being "at sea" when actually they sit at desks in Washington.

To make the myth more realistic, Admiral King lives most of the week on a yacht in the Potomac. It is a small yacht and his multitudinous staff has no room to live there with him. However, they draw extra pay for the hazards of life "at sea."

So when payday arrives, the paymaster carries a satchel down to Admiral King's yacht to pay off the staff. The paymaster knows full well that the men are not on the yacht. However, he goes through this ritual, then comes back from the yacht to the navy department, where he finds the men and gives them their pay.

STEEL-WAGE DISPUTE

Hard-working Will Davis, chairman of the War Labor board, is having a tough time selecting a panel to settle the vital question of wages in the steel industry. He proposes a panel of three, one representing labor, one the steel industry, one the public, with three alternates. But though he has called up all sorts of people and literally begged them to serve, their patriotism seems deficient when it comes to labor disputes.

Meanwhile, the steel companies, faced with retroactive pay for whatever wage decision is finally handed down, are getting restless.

New Mexico is more aroused over the Bataan atrocities than any other state, because the entire New Mexican National Guard, being able to speak Spanish, was sent to the Philippines and those who survived were captured there . . . FDR may have a hard time carrying the state.

"The Shortest Route to Japan" is the slogan of the Korean Affairs institute, which has just opened offices in Washington. It is urging use of Korean bases only 600 miles from Tokyo.

Your Old Woollens Go Into New Rugs

NOW is the time to use every scrap of old woolen goods that you have on hand. That old coat the moths got into; the dress from which spots cannot be removed; the trousers that are ragged at the knees—all of the material in these may be made into handsome hooked rugs that you will be proud to own.

The square rug in the sketch was designed to fit in a smart dressing table corner. The rose-and-ribbon design in the chintz skirt and window valance was copied in making a border and center flower for the rug.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

More than 25 American automotive companies are making military vehicles for United States soldiers and our Allies—and they have first call on tires and other rubber items.

Forty thousand additional miles have been obtained from individual tires in use at Camp Stoneman because of the tire-saving campaign in force there since rubber became scarce. No tricks—just plain tire care and recapping at the right time.

An 875-pound electric magnet attached to an electric truck "sweeps" the floors of a munitions factory of steel litter and serves the double purpose of salvaging metal and preventing tire punctures.

THE STORY THUS FAR: Lieut. Col. Frank Kurtz, pilot of the Flying Fortress known as "The Swallow," which escaped from Clark Field, tells of that fatal day when the Japs struck in the Philippines. Old 99, another Fortress, is struck down before it can get off the ground. The field is littered with the skeletons of U. S. planes. Buzz Wagner, air ace, is chased by Japs in his P-40. He meets Lieut. Russ Church and together they bomb a Jap field. Church fails to return. Other pilots are given their targets, including Colin Kelly. Kelly's plane settles for a Jap battleship, but the plane is ablaze. Eight bale out. Kelly bales out but is so close to the ground he never had a chance.

CHAPTER V

"Of course when I heard all this I also heard about the whopping big target he'd hit and sunk. But I didn't think much of this at the time, and I don't think Colin did either."

"If I know the boy, and I think I do, after he saw his oxygen system was on fire, and had given orders for the other guys to jump, and was sitting there hanging back on his stick and fighting his rudder in order to give them a chance to do it, he wasn't thinking about how many gross tons that Japanese ship displaced, but about his parents and Marian and little Corkie. And later when he was trying to crawl out of the upper escape hatch before his clothes caught on fire, it was the same, and still later, when he cleared the hatch but saw the ground coming up at him, too close and too fast for his chute ever to have a chance to crack open, I don't think he was worrying about how big his posthumous medal was going to be, but only worrying about Marian and Corkie."

"A little later in the afternoon one of our fighters came in and began to circle the field, fluttering like a wounded bird. I could see it was something serious—I guessed even then an aileron might be shot away, so I gave him the green light to come in and land. He began to make passes at the field, cutting his throttle to pick out the strip of straight sand through the bomb craters, marked by a maze of red flags we'd put up. But each time he'd throttle back his left wing would drop and he'd have to gun her again, making a slow climbing circle up off the field."

"It began to get me. 'Come on, son, come on, put it down, before we get into trouble.' On the last trial he gunned it, came around, and then tried to pull up straight, but too late. Teetering down the field, he caught one wing on one of our slightly damaged Fortresses, tearing it off, and then himself cartwheeled off into the trees—killing a sergeant who had been working on a plane back there. The pilot wasn't hurt much himself, but one more of our precious few P-40's was gone."

"But, following orders, I was still giving the Fortresses the red light to stay in the air, and I began to worry about this. Maybe orders had been issued to bring them in, but someone had failed to notify me. Some of them would circle for a while, and then would head on back for Del Monte, more than six hundred miles away, while they still had enough gas to get there."

"Finally old Jim Connally said the hell with it, and came on in without my giving him any light at all. He needed more gas to get back to Mindanao and couldn't perch up there all day, and a little after this the Colonel said I could give the others the green light to come in and gas up, although any hour, any minute, we were expecting the Japs back. He wanted to save those remaining Forts at any cost."

"We got out of bed just as dawn was breaking and, folding our sheets inside our brown blankets so no white would show, stuffed them under the khaki coats—we didn't want anything that would indicate on a Jap recon picture that we were now sleeping in that field. The Japs were reconnoitering the hell out of the place with high-altitude cameras, two or three times daily."

"I spent the next day in the tower and it was much like the first, except it was plainer and plainer that we would have to abandon Clark."

"So the next morning the evacuation began. They gave me one of the planes they had patched up, and Al Mueller and I made two trips back and forth to Del Monte loaded down with members of the ground crews who were to service our planes at Del Monte."

"I'll never forget my last trip out. It was at night of course—it wasn't safe to leave a plane on the ground by day at Clark any more. We were taking off at three in the morning in order to be through the danger zone by dawn, and I'd had almost no sleep at all. But while they were warming the motors they came running to me with the news that there was a pretty bad leak in my fuel line. So what in hell to do? I could wait while they ripped a fuel line from one of the semiwrecked Forts standing around on the field, and installed it in mine. But by then it would be after dawn, and if we encountered Jap fighters, there I'd be, with sergeants stuffed into every corner of the plane, so that we wouldn't have room to swivel a machine gun in our own defense."

"Or we could tape up our leaky fuel line, get the hell out of there in the darkness, and pray the leak didn't get worse or a hot exhaust stack didn't set it off in mid-air. We chanced it, and made it all right, but it turned out to be my last trip, because the next day the Japs came back and put out of commission what was left of Clark Field."

"I got the story from Eddie Oliver, who had been my navigator on Old 99—he and I were the only survivors of the entire crew—when he got down to Del Monte a few days later. 'The Japs, having reconnoitered Clark Field thoroughly, came over all ready for business. Some guy had carelessly left a pillow exposed in the cornfield, so they knew we'd been sleeping there. They blew hell out of it with their high-altitude stuff, and didn't touch the regular flying field, which they'd put out in the first day's raid. Then their fighters came over and with incendiaries set fire to the nipa shacks which had been our quarters. In them was everything I owned, including the watches, diaries, and wallets which had belonged to the crew of Old 99.'

"It was now hopeless to operate from Clark, everyone saw. Anyway, the Japs had landed light tanks on the coast at Apari, so five hundred rifles were issued to what ground personnel we had left there and they went off with infantry units to chase them out if they could. The poor devils ended up on Bataan. Each time we moved, we had to leave some of the ground crews behind."

"So here we were now at Del Monte, about fifteen Fortresses in all, but patched up and in such bad repair we were lucky if we could get half a dozen off the ground at any one time."

He wasn't thinking about how many gross tons that Jap ship displaced.

"But otherwise it was a lovely setup. A pretty turf field right up against the big pineapple cannery—the executives had used it for their little private planes before the war. A country club these executives had built, swell food (until we ate it all up), a swimming pool, turf tennis courts—even a few white women, which set all the boys staring—but not an antiaircraft gun or a fighter plane to protect us for hundreds of miles around."

"Pretty soon we improvised our own ack-ack. A couple of ships cracked up, and we jerked their .50-caliber guns out of them and installed them in sandbag pits; this would be of some help against low-altitude strafing if the Japs were accommodating enough to come in low."

"And one of the first things that happened was that we lost our squadron commander, Major Gibbs. He had taken off under cover of darkness on a secret mission—and did not come back. We never knew what happened. Weeks later the native constabulary of Negros Island was to bring in the cushion of his plane—it had cracked up against a mountain in the dark."

"But, sweetheart," said Margo, "you're forgetting your first cable."

"No, I'm not," said Frank. "I got it off as soon as I could."

"All it said," Margo explained, "was: 'Beloved. Doing all right under circumstances. Wire Eddy's brother, Frank.'"

"Of course I sent the wire, but I couldn't understand at all. Eddie, of course, was Frank's navigator on Old 99. But what about the other boys? Why hadn't Frank told me to wire their families of all the sergeants. It wasn't like Frank to forget."

"Anyway, all cables are unsatisfactory. This one was dated at Manila on the seventeenth, so of course Frank had been alive then. But I hadn't got it until the nineteenth. Anything could have happened in those two days, and for the first time in my life I was powerless to help him. I'd been furiously writing letters—still addressing them to Clark Field. Each was a problem, because I wanted each to fill a need. I couldn't tell him I was worried, because that would be letting him down. He would think I didn't have complete confidence in him. I would start to write the little news about family affairs, and it seemed so trite—because maybe he'd be reading it in a foxhole, not having eaten for a week. Maybe he'd be wounded. And maybe each one would be the last letter he would get—for a long while the only thing he'd hear from me."

"Then I had to do something about myself—I could see that. Sitting in my room thinking, I would go to pieces. And I wanted to get started doing something useful before Christmas. Back in October Frank promised me he'd call on Christmas Day, and now I realized I'd been building on hearing his voice then more than I knew. I also realized that maybe he wouldn't be able to. If that call didn't come through, it would be hard for me to take."

"My little brother (he's a fighter pilot now) was getting married out on the coast during the holidays. They were asking me to go out. But suppose Frank did call me Christmas, and missed me? I decided to wait in Omaha for that call."

"But just waiting would drive anyone crazy. I wanted to help—to get close to the Air Corps. So I went down to Colonel Houghland's office—he was air officer of our 7th Corps area in Omaha—and put it up to him."

"He didn't laugh because I wanted to work without pay—he couldn't have been nicer. He showed me huge piles of applications for aviation-cadet assignments in the Air Corps that were coming in. I could help, he explained, by classifying and filing these, getting them in their proper groups, help speed up the stream of reinforcements which the boys out East would need so badly—we didn't dream how badly."

"We needed everything," said Frank. "Ground crews, pilots, copilots. And to make it worse, our own group commander, Colonel Eubank, had been hurt and was in a Manila hospital."

"We were getting more and more uneasy. Here we were, comfortable on this beautiful field. It was as peaceful as Clark Field had been before December eighth. We'd fled from Clark down here to Mindanao, and even as we were arriving the Japs were putting troops ashore at the southern tip of this same island, where thirty thousand Japanese 'farmers' had taken over the city of Davao on the first day."

"But here at Del Monte we saw people who didn't seem to know a war was on. The only military around was some kind of a transportation outfit. The first day we were there I got hold of a couple of privates and gave them orders to dim out the headlights of every car—no matter whose—that approached the field. But the transportation officer decided he'd stop all that. It seemed the boys, carrying out my orders, had even stopped a staff car, and the transportation officer explained that they needed more light."

"Well, our planes were on that field, and I knew the Japs were headed down the coast and would be here soon enough anyway, and I didn't want to attract them any sooner than necessary."

"But before they did come, the old 19th Bombardment Group—or what was left of it—got in some mighty hard licks at them. For instance, there was the Le Gaspi Bay mission. Our Intelligence reported a big concentration of Jap ships moving south, toward us down the coast of Luzon. Of course that meant the handwriting on the wall for us, particularly if one was a carrier with Zeros which would presently be in range of us and could strafe us on the ground—remember we hadn't a single American fighter within five hundred miles."

"Sure enough, Intelligence presently reported that they thought one of this concentration was a carrier, and now they were just off Le Gaspi. It was up to us to take off and do what we could. We'd been working like hell to get the planes in shape, and finally had six which we thought could complete the mission and get home. But remember Old 99 was back on Clark, and I was a planeless pilot. So it ought to be Harry's story—he was navigator on Jack Adams' plane."

"Well," said Harry Schriber, the navigator, "it was like this. The six of us were to start at ten o'clock, and Jim Connally rolled out first, and got a flat tire right on the runway—throwing one wing into the ground and crumpling it. That left five, and it wasn't so good, because there is safety in numbers in Fortresses—the more of them that go over a target together, the more fire power you can bring to bear against the Zeros, and the more Forts will get back home."

"But anyway we started. The pilots were Shorty Wheelless, Pease, Lee Coats, Vandevanter, and of course Jack Adams—I was his navigator."

"We are flying in formation to our agreed rendezvous, in case we got lost in heavy weather—a point thirty-five miles due west of our target—and we are due to be there in two hours and fifteen minutes after our start."

JESUS BETRAYED, DENIED AND CONDEMNED

LESSON TEXT: Mark 14:10, 11, 53, 54, 66-72; 15:12-15. GOLDEN TEXT: He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief.—Isaiah 53:3.

The time had come! Jesus was about to be condemned and crucified; and though sinful men thought thus to rid themselves of the One who had pierced their hypocrisy and unveiled their unrighteousness, His death was, in the providence of God, the giving of Himself for our sins.

What He endured as He went to the cross is enough to break one's heart, for here we see the denial, betrayal and compromise of men.

I. Christ Sold for Money (14:10, 11)

When one sees the awful things which have been done and are being done for money in this world, it becomes clear why the Bible repeatedly calls it "filthy lucre."

"Money! How many awful things have been done for money. How many dishonest officials have secured high places in government by money! How many people have lost their lifesavings because some shrewd, crooked broker schemed to take their money away, because he wanted it. How many millions of people have been kept in poverty because men cared more to increase their wealth than they did to relieve the distress of those who worked for them. . . . Money is what keeps the dance halls going; a lust for money is what keeps our breweries and distilleries open; it is money that makes men want to produce lascivious plays and motion pictures" (W. M. Smith).

Fundamentally, it was the love of money that made Judas betray his Lord. "What will ye give me?" was his question (Matt. 26:15).

But money is not the only price with which men may be paid. We find next—

II. Christ Deserted for Comfort (14:53, 54)

Peter would not have risen to the suggestion that he sell his Lord for money, so Satan was too smart to stir his loyalty by such a suggestion. He used another method with Peter.

Things had become very difficult for our Lord. He was led away to be falsely accused and subjected to persecution. It was no longer comfortable to be at His side, as it had been when He fed the multitude and healed the sick, and silenced His enemies.

This was cold unpleasant business. Why should Peter get mixed up in it? After all he could just as well keep a safe distance, and besides, the enemies of the Lord had kindled it and stood around it, but that didn't need to make Peter an enemy of His—or did it?

How many Christians who would meet with hasty and courageous denial the suggestion that they sell their Lord, have betrayed Him by warming themselves at the fires of this world.

III. Christ Denied for Fear (14:66-72)

Peter, the staunch defender of our Lord, who had assured Him that no matter how cowardly the others might be, he would stand fast (Mark 14:29), now quails before a servant maid. He curses and swears to try to strengthen his words of denial.

What had happened to Peter? He had become so at home by the fire of the enemies of his Master that he was afraid to confess his relationship to Him. He had followed so far off that He had lost touch with the Lord, and was again like the Peter who on another day looked away from the Master's face and feared the boisterous waves (Matt. 14:30).

Peter was afraid, and he denied his Lord. How many there are who are like him. They tremble before an unbelieving world, and fearing the scoffing of poor, weak, sinful men, they deny their Lord.

It is time that Christian people took courage and stood up for the Lord in all times and circumstances.

IV. Christ Condemned for Convenience (15:12-15)

Pilate found no fault in Christ. He had no desire to condemn Him. He wanted to set Him free. But it proved to be politically inexpedient. To stand by his convictions concerning this innocent person would have greatly inconvenienced him in many ways. So "wishing to content the multitude" he delivered Jesus to be scourged and crucified. Men and women today are willing to condemn Christ anew because to submit to Him and bear His name would require of them a sacrificial living which they are not willing to give. So they pass Him by, and go on to a Christless eternity.

It costs something to follow Jesus—to stand true to Him in a rejecting world. One wonders at times whether this is not one reason why God does not send a revival to the Church. We are probably not willing to bear the inconvenience. It would upset our regular order of life.

SERVICEMEN'S NEWS

Jan. 3, 1944

Dear Friends:

Thanks for the Christmas box. I received it Dec. 23.

I am now at a new Post in Cleveland. Arriving here Dec. 28 and finding the weather quite different from that at my previous Post in Florida but like it a lot better.

I start college Jan. 5 and from what I hear it is swell.

Cleveland is a swell place and a haven for servicemen. It has approximately twenty service clubs and many museums and places of interest so there is plenty to do in our spare time of which we have very little.

I will be stationed here approximately five months, during which time I will have ten hours flying along with my regular college course.

A-s Richard D. Anderson, Cleveland, Ohio

P.S. Thanks again for the Christmas box and also for the Tinley Park Times, its swell to know what is going on in the old home town and what my old friends are doing these days.

Jan. 6, 1944

Dear Tinley Park:

I'm certainly bound to be used in the dog house soon if I don't write and thank you for the grand Christmas box. It arrived in perfect condition and it was really appreciated.

Your box was the first one to arrive in the nurses quarters and I couldn't help but open it up. I knew that later everyone would be getting candy and cookies from home and would share with me.

So we had a party. Everything was so good. Nurses are known for their excellent appetites and it must be true, cause about 25 minutes after I opened the box all the food was gone. The cards and stationery have come in mighty handy too. Thanks a million friends.

I like Camp Grant, but now that I've had my training I'm ready for bigger and better things. I don't know what to expect but I'm sure it won't be long till I'm moved. I'm sure to be home again any way before long and till I see you I send my best wishes to the nicest little town this side of heaven.

Sincerely,
Marianne Moss

Dear Folks:

I received your Christmas package and I want to thank you a lot for everything you sent. I receive the Tinley Park Times every week so I keep up with the other fellows quite well.

I graduated from school about 8 weeks ago and I'm shipping out for Aerial Gunnery school the 6th day of Jan. I'm expecting a lot of excitement and I think I am going to get it. Again I say thank you for everything.

Dear Friends:

I received your swell Christmas box about a week ago. It was sure swell of you to send it and I want to thank you for the box.

I spent a lovely Christmas with some civilians, it was almost like home. We had plenty of turkey and plenty of everything. It didn't seem like Christmas it was too warm and there wasn't any snow on the ground. This was the first Christmas I spent without snow, it seemed sort of funny.

We got back from Oregon a short time ago, after spending about three months out there. We were mostly out in the desert, there was nothing but sage and sand out there. You could look over the sand for miles and see everyone in sight. The days were hot and the nights cold. It was fun at first sleeping under the open sky for that was all new to me but at the end I got tired of it all and I wished I was back in Fort Lewis. But after we did get back after a few weeks of the same old grind, I wish I was back in the desert. That is about all I have to say so once again I say thanks for the lovely box.

Pfc. Alvin Polansky

Citizen Service Committee,

Dear Sir:

I am writing to thank you for the Christmas box sent to my brother, Edward Beckler. It was greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

Helen Sandidge
P.S. I am writing for him because he has little time to write as they are being trained at night and on Sundays.

Public Service Shows Increase In Rural Business

An increase in both rural customers and total mileage of rural electric lines was shown in 1943 by the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois which soon will complete one-third of a century in bringing electric service to farms and other rural consumers across a 6000 square mile area of northern Illinois.

During the year just closed, 509 new customers were added to the company's rural lines and total length of power lines was increased from 6164 miles to 6212. Farm electric customers are being added wherever applicants can justify their wartime need for electricity under war production board regulations.

Citing the rural growth of the company since its founding in 1911, Britton I. Budd president, recalled that the company served but 127 farms with electric service at the end of its first year of operations in 1912. Today, the company furnishes electric service to 24,395 farms and rural units across a 16 county area in which over 85 percent of the farms now have electricity available.

Reflecting a greater use of electricity in the production of vital foods for the war, the company reported an average kilowatt-hour use per farm customer last year of 2,228 as compared with 20,017 in the previous year, an increase in average use of 211 kilowatt-hours.

In December, the average farm customer used 199.6 kilowatt-hours as compared with 187.6 in the same 1942 month.

The company report pointed out that in many areas electricity has helped break farm production bottle necks, especially where the pinch was felt in the exodus of skilled farm hands.

The company has plans available and is urging its farm customers to build homemade pig and chicken brooders, milk stirrers and other electric devices which require few critical materials and will augment the dwindling supply of manufactured electric equipment during the 1944 farming season.

Electric equipment saving substantial amounts of labor on the farm also includes water pumps, milking machine; feed grinders, water warmers; grain elevators, feed mixers; seed germinators, and hay hoists in addition to the usual household appliances, such as refrigerators; irons and washing machines.

Says Ration Token Contract Needs Investigation

By Fred E. Busbey, M. C.
(concluded from last week)

None of us is perfect; we all make mistakes, but it is this attitude of "the public and industry be damned, we are going ahead with the program even though we are wrong" that has brought about so much opposition to the OPA.

Mr. Speaker, you will note how I have refrained from going into any details in these remarks regarding the damage, harm and inconvenience the nuisance size tokens will cause machine industry and the public. In the transit industry, the vending fact, a great many tests have been made throughout the country that prove conclusively that a tremendous amount of harm will be caused by the new size tokens.

If the OPA continues to refuse to change the size of the tokens back to the size originally adopted in October, which can be done without interference with the token program by, immediately starting the production of the .888 inch token to replace the nuisance size one as rapidly as possible, I predict that all of us will be flooded with protests based on the experience of various concerns and individuals.

If this happens, I guarantee you I will be back with the next chapter of this story. This is not the end, but just the beginning of the nuisance-size ration token story, unless the OPA admits its error and takes prompt steps to correct it.

I am now asking that a Congressional investigation be made of this entire ration token program. I shall be only too glad to furnish to the committee making such investigation a considerable amount of information and facts which lack of time here today has prevented me from giving you.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time the people of this country, are being told at least some of the truth of what is going on here in Washington, and some of the mistakes that are being made.

This year, with service flags in windows of nearly every home, Red Cross will mean so much more to Americans. As depicted in this reproduction of a 1944 Red Cross War Fund poster, many windows also will display the symbol of participation in the cause of Mercy and Humanity—the Red Cross.

I'm a one woman army
right in my kitchen

I used to wish I were a man. I envied men their part in winning victory. Now I realize I can do plenty myself, right here in my own home, to stop the Axis. I have become a one-woman army, waging war on waste and inefficiency. I tend a victory garden, can foods, collect fats for explosives, save waste paper, buy War Bonds with every dollar I can save.

Being in command of a household is no small job. There are vitamin "supply lines" to maintain on rationed foods ... daily housecleaning campaigns to organize ... a budget to balance and still buy War Bonds ... plenty to do.

AND THE QUARTERMASTER CORPS

A family, like an army, marches on its stomach. To keep my family healthy for their war duties, I select their foods methodically, for balanced meals rich in vitamins. I put into practice what I have learned about wartime meal planning. I shun Black Market goods, buy only what I need.

"MAKE IT DO - AND DO WELL!"

• Our wartime program of salvage and re-use covers the whole range of telephone materials.

Here, for example, the telephone man is weather-proofing an outside wire so it won't get wet when it rains and short-circuit somebody's telephone. With new wire unobtainable, this device has given continued service to many who otherwise wouldn't have it.

Naturally, it takes time and ingenuity to recondition old material, but our motto has been "make it do — and do well!"

By and large, telephone service has been good—still the best in the world—and we intend to stay right at that job of keeping it so.

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

"Judge, would you mind tellin' Charlie here what you told me the other night walkin' home from lodge. I can't word it just the way you did."

"Sure thing, Tim. Here's what I told him, Charlie. There's no such thing as votin' a nation, a state, a county, or even a community dry. We had proof enough of that during our 13 years of prohibition. What you really vote for is whether liquor is going to be sold legally or illegally...whether the community is going to get needed taxes for schools, hospitals, and the like, or whether this money is going to go to gangsters and bootleggers. That's the answer, boys simple as A-B-C."

Here's a really enthusiastic letter you'll want to read:

"I suffered for years with constipation. Took everything from salts to castor oil, and felt run down, always taking so many physics. Then, two weeks ago, I found out about ALL-BRAN. Since I've been eating ALL-BRAN, I have needed no physics, and am starting to feel like a new man. I'm telling my customers on my milk route about your wonderful product." Mr. Leon Swartz, 1738 N. Wilton St., Phila., Pa.

What's the secret of such reports of ALL-BRAN's results? Simply that ALL-BRAN is one of Nature's most effective sources of certain "cellulosic" elements—lack of which in sufficient quantities is a common cause of constipation! They help the friendly colonic flora fluff up and prepare the colonic contents for easy, natural elimination. ALL-BRAN is not a cathartic! It doesn't "sweep you out"! It is a gentle-acting, "regulating" food! If this is your trouble eat ALL-BRAN regularly, drink plenty of water. See if you don't cheer its welcome relief! Insist on genuine ALL-BRAN, made only by Kellogg's in Battle Creek.

UNUSUAL CONTENTMENT FOUND IN OWENS COUNTY, KENTUCKY

Progressive Merchants and Working People of Owenton Have Had Initiative to Organize Community.

By BARROW LYONS

(EDITOR'S NOTE—This is one of a series of articles written for this paper by Barrow Lyons, staff correspondent of Western Newspaper Union. He has just completed an extended trip through the nation and in these reports gives his first-hand impressions of what rural America is thinking as we enter the third year of war and the first weeks of a presidential election year. Any opinions expressed are the writer's and not necessarily those of this newspaper.)

OWENTON, KY.—On the edge of the rich Blue Grass district of Kentucky is a farming county that is neither rich nor poor. Booms and depressions affect it less than most places. Its intelligent, hard working and deeply religious people raise nearly three-fourths of their own food, grow the best of burley tobacco, engage in dairy farming, raise cattle, pigs and poultry for the market, and sheep for wool and lambs.

Contentment to an unusual degree seems to have settled over Owen county, Kentucky—considerable satisfaction even with the New Deal. There are rumblings of discontent with the many restrictions which Washington bureaus have placed upon these people—but, on the whole, they feel that the Democratic administration has brought tremendous benefits to them.

Owenton, a prosperous town of some 1,200 persons, is the county seat. Owen county has a population of about 10,000. Its people patronize Owenton's progressive merchants, whose stores, in general, are more modern than those to be found in most rural small towns.

Perhaps the secret of Owen county's acceptance of the New Deal lies in the fact that the town and farm folk of this community have had the initiative to organize their own affairs. The New Deal agencies, finding this high degree of local initiative, have been inclined to interfere less than in communities not so much in sympathy with its basic aims.

Owenton citizens will tell you that the spirit of co-operation which flourishes in the county stems very largely from the leadership of Reuben H. Proctor, former president of the County Farm Bureau federation, now director of the State Farm bureau. Not only did he show them how to work together, but he developed leaders who co-operated on a long-term program of advancement for the farms of the area.

Today home production of food supply is controlled by a home committee of 5 members through 233 neighborhood leaders directing the activities of 685 farm families. A total of 973 boys and girls are enrolled in the 4-H clubs, which boast 100 per cent enrollment of the youngsters in schools who are 10 years old, or older.

The Owen County Farm bureau was one of the first to request the Rural Electrical administration to help them get electricity on the Owen county is the tobacco program. Base quotas of land permitted under the AAA program have restricted considerably the amount of land placed under cultivation for tobacco. Some farmers are inclined to grumble at these restrictions, but when the AAA plan was put to a referendum vote in the November elections, 98 per cent of the farmers voted for it—only 2 per cent against it.

"I presume Kentuckians are not different from most other folk," commented M. H. Bourne, editor emeritus of the Owenton News-Herald. "They don't like too much control, or to be told what to do and how to do it. But men who make a living entirely from tobacco raising know darn well that when they get more profit from three acres than they used to get from seven, a certain amount of control is good for all. Even so, some are mad because they can't grow seven acres."

"Government interference, though, does not affect us as much as in the larger centers. We do feel, however, that at times too much central authority has been exercised to get deals put across, that with a little more patience on the government's part our people would have heartily backed without coercion."

But there are some who say that in the tobacco stripping rooms, where men talk freely among themselves, feeling against the Roosevelt administration is rising. Feed has become so expensive that many farmers are now selling off their cattle and hogs—and they think the OPA is responsible because it enforces price ceilings at the livestock purchasing points, but has not been able to enforce ceilings on grain.

Thomas Forsee, cashier of the First National bank of Owenton, inclined to take the conservative point of view. He said:

"This is a very strong Democratic county. We have never had a Republican in office in it. In the last election, there was a noticeable turning against the New Deal, however, for the county went Democratic by only a small majority. Many feel that the results of government controls have not justified their great multiplication. Farmers feel that too much extravagance is going to prove disastrous in the long run."

"However, tobacco acreage allocation has proven very satisfactory because it has brought much better prices."

The school system also has organized a shop project which turned out more than $4,000 worth of repairs for farm machinery last year, and may have done double that amount of work this year. With the help of publicly furnished instructors, repairs are made at no cost to farmers. Supplies are paid for by the state department of education.

If one were to tell Owenton citizens that this was "socialism" or "collectivism" they would smile at you, wondering what on earth you were talking about. They consider it their own brand of rugged individualism.

As Owenton, Kentucky, Views It . . .

Editor M. H. Bourne speaks: "With the help of the federal government we are today enjoying a water project. The PWA furnished a lot of labor and gave the town the right to pay for materials over a long period of years. This is being paid for out of the revenue derived from selling water at 40 cents for the first 1,000 gallons a year, and then on a descending scale."

Under a similar arrangement we were enabled to build a satisfactory sewerage system.

"The election of a Republican governor was not so much a turning against the New Deal as it was against the manner in which state contracts were handled. There was considerable graft. Kentuckians will go along quietly for a while, but they are alert in a crisis."

If Land Needs Boron It Shows in Alfalfa

Yellowing Leaves Is Usual Danger Sign

It is just as important to have a sufficient supply of available boron in the soil as it is to have nitrogen, phosphorus, potassium and other nutrient elements, although only an extremely small amount of boron is required for normal plant development, according to C. H. Stinson and E. E. DeTurk of the University of Illinois.

Of the common farm crops, legumes require more boron than do grain or grass crops and thus are more sensitive to a deficiency in the soil than are the latter.

Symptoms of boron shortage are more frequently observed in alfalfa than in other legume crops. They include a shortening of the upper internodes and the appearance at the uppermost nodes (joints) of lateral shoots that frequently extend beyond the tip of the central shoot, producing a rosette effect. In advanced stages, the terminal bud may be dead. Yellowing or reddening of the leaves is generally, but not always, present.

Boron is usually applied as borax, which is one of the common water softeners used in the household. It contains 11 per cent boron. Alfalfa growers who have observed symptoms suspected of resulting from boron deficiency may first try fertilizing a small plot in the field with borax for one or more years at the rate of 25 pounds to the acre. A 20-ounce box of borax that can be bought in a grocery store will provide enough boron for an area two rods wide and four rods long. It can be spread conveniently with a hand-horn seeder. If used at rates greater than 25 to 35 pounds an acre borax may injure or even kill the alfalfa.

A dozen dried whole eggs are packed in this little box, 3 1/2 inches by 2 1/2 inches, for export, principally to England. Each package, after being tightly sealed, is dipped in wax to protect the contents from deterioration.

Eleven-Acre 'Hothouse'

Yields 6 Crops a Year

Mr. David Lowe, who lives near Edinburgh, has a gardening project said to be unique in the United Kingdom. To sum it up, Mr. Lowe has 11 acres underlaid with steam pipes and covered a foot or so above the surface, with glass panes set in frames. By shooting steam into the ground once a year, he "boils" the soil, killing all weeds. Each acre gets 100 tons of fertilizer and decomposed straw a year. He gets from six to eight crops a year—a fantastic yield of lettuce, turnips, carrots, cauliflower, leek, onions, beans, and a lot of other things. In the short summer the glass is removed and the plants watered with warm water from overhead sprinklers. It is said his crops grow together in "wild joy." It sounds like it. Mr. Lowe appears to have raised the old hothouse and forcing bed to its highest efficiency. It must cost money, but the Loves of the Edinburgh country have never been in business strictly for fun. His scheme seems likely to stir up almost as much excitement as our own Mr. Ed Faulkner provoked by his recent campaign against the moldboard plow. Maybe Mr. Lowe and Mr. Faulkner could get together on a project to feed tomorrow's world.

Natives of Solomons Use Idols as Ocean Guides

"Spiritual aids to navigation" are still used by natives of the Solomon Islands.

Though radio direction finders, periscopes and other scientific aids are commonplace in the South seas since the navies of the United Nations and Japan came into conflict, the natives still place their faith in wooden lookout men. These are grotesquely carved figures in human form placed on the bow of a canoe, in a position from which they seem to be peering down through the water.

The Solomon Islanders regard the images as representatives of a protecting spirit which is supposed to watch for hidden dangers.
